Bradfield College: Army House.

Army House, as its name implies was originally opened in 1890 specifically for the boarding of children from Military backgrounds. It is located in the 13th century manor courtyard of the School and was extended and refurbished in 2000 to include all the buildings around the archway entrance through College Gate, into the heart of the School.

All of the bed/study rooms are single or twin aspect with sinks and fitted furniture. Each bathroom and toilet facility is shared between three bed/study rooms and all of the rooms have individual design and character. There are two small kitchen areas on each floor for preparing drinks and snacks.

Army House is unique in having several individualistic games and recreation areas as well as a spacious common room and a computer centre with email and web access.

Its central location, overall quality and rambling design make it appealing to many groups. Army also has a private tutors flat with en-suite and self catering area suitable for important guests or group leaders. This has a capacity for three occupants and boasts a kitchen and en-suite bathroom.
